

Protecting your privacy- our Privacy Policy

Who are we?

The Australian Medical Association of South Australia – AMA(SA) - is South Australia's peak membership organisation representing doctors and medical students in this State. We support and represent our members through advocacy, policy development and the provision of a range of member services and benefits. We also seek to promote and protect the interests of patients and the wider South Australian community by working with government, providing information, reports and commentary on health issues, advocacy, and active involvement in health policy debate. For more information on the AMA(SA) please visit our website <https://sa.ama.com.au>.

Our structure includes the Australian Medical Association Limited and related companies at a National level. A key subsidiary of AMA Ltd is the Australasian Medical Publishing Company Proprietary Limited (AMPCo) which publishes the Medical Journal of Australia and the Medical Directory of Australia. At times, we provide the federal office of AMA Ltd with personal information which are incorporated into their membership database for distribution of the MJA. AMA(NSW) provides administrative assistance to our member database but has a similar Privacy Policy to protect information.

Our privacy commitment to you

Privacy protection and confidentiality of health information is essential for quality health care. While we do not provide health care services ourselves; we too are committed to protecting the privacy and confidentiality of the information we collect from members, visitors to our website, people who contact us and from our suppliers and partners.

In addition to this professional and ethical commitment, we are required to comply with applicable Commonwealth, State and Territory privacy law. Under these privacy laws, we are required to comply with a set of privacy principles. The core principles are in the Privacy Act 1988. More information about these principles and Australian privacy law can be found on the Australian Information Commissioner's website www.oaic.gov.au.

What personal information do we collect, store, and use and how do we collect this?

AMA(SA) collects personal information from members, persons enquiring or applying for membership, members of the public, journalists, government agencies and other organisations seeking information or comment, visitors to our website, persons purchasing services from us and from our suppliers.

Much of this information is collected directly from the person concerned, including through emails, telephone calls and our website, apps, and mobile devices. We also collect this information from publicly available websites, directories, and databases and via social media such as Linked In. Our website includes a Privacy Statement which deals with issues specific to the collection of information through that site. This Policy should be read in conjunction with such statement. In relation to applications for membership and, members, the information collected will include (where applicable) information about other languages spoken and membership of other medical associations, Colleges, and professional groups.

Unless your contact with us or request for information, does not require us to know who you are, for membership and other services we will need your name and contact details.

Why do we collect this information and for what do we use it?

AMA(SA) collects, stores, and uses this information to provide services to our members, to provide information and services to the media, government, and community and to enable us to advocate on behalf of our members and the community on health issues.

We only provide others with information that would identify you if it were necessary to provide you with the service or information that you requested, you have agreed to us providing it to them or it is already publicly available information.

AMA Ltd provides your information to AMPCo. AMPCo collects, stores, and uses this information for the compilation and publication of the Medical Directory of Australia, distribution of the AMA Ltd medical journal, the Medical Journal of Australia (MJA) and other associated medical publications, for direct marketing of information, goods, and services to persons on the AMPCo database and for statistical and industry analysis. AMPCo's privacy policy may be viewed here AMPCo Privacy Policy.

What about use of personal information for direct marketing?

Australian privacy law limits the use of personal information for direct marketing of goods and services.

We use your personal information to keep you informed about member services, products and publications.

When a person applies for membership of AMA(SA), they are provided with an opportunity to decline or to indicate what types of goods or services they are interested in receiving further information about.

Where AMA(SA) or AMA Ltd. send you direct marketing material we provide you with a means to advise us that you no longer wish to receive some or all this material.

If at any time you have a concern about direct marketing material, you have received from us or through use by others of our databases, or you wish to change your preferences in relation to receipt of future material, please contact us by emailing us at membership@amasa.org.au.

How can AMA(SA) members update or amend their information?

AMA(SA) members can easily update the information about them by logging in online to the AMA(SA) website - Member log in.

How do we store and protect the information we hold about you?

We store your information at our premises, in electronic systems under our control and with contracted data storage providers. We take appropriate steps to protect the security of the information we hold about you, including protections against unauthorised access, virus or other electronic intrusions, fire, theft, or loss. We require our contracted providers to do the same. Our staff are bound by strict requirements regarding the protection of the privacy of the information we collect and hold about you.

We or our contracted data storage providers may use servers, systems, and cloud computing providers outside of Australia. Our contracts with them require them to protect the privacy of your information when held on these servers and/or using cloud computing. Our contractors are required to comply with the Australian Privacy laws.

You have a right to see what information we hold about you

Under Australian privacy law, you have rights of access to personal information we hold about you. These rights also include correction of any errors in this information. Should you wish to access this information, please contact us. Unless the access you request will require special steps or significant resources, there will be no charge for providing you with this access.

Do you send my information overseas?

AMA(SA) does not foresee exchanging member information with any overseas body. AMA Ltd, in addition to the use from time to time of data storage and cloud providers, may provide data to overseas bodies. For example, AMA Ltd may exchange member information between the AMA and other country medical associations or exchange MJA subscriber information with other country medical journals.

For how long do you keep my personal information?

We keep your personal information active for as long as is required to enable us to meet your needs.

We keep membership records and other personal information on file to enable us to undertake statistical and historical analysis and reporting. As part of our data security, we regularly backup and archive our electronic databases.

What if I want more information on how you protect my privacy, or I have a complaint?

Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have a concern or issue in relation to how we collect, store, use or disclose your personal information.

If your concern relates to your AMA(SA) membership or another AMA(SA) function or service, please contact us by email to membership@amasa.org.au or call or mail us at the following:
